By March of 1933, millions of people were unemployed in the United States. President Franklin Delano Roosevelt created the Civilian Conservation Corps, as part of his New Deal. During its nine-year run, the CCC employed more than 3 million men and built more than 40,000 bridges, planted billions of trees, restored nearly 4,000 historic sites and structures, improved thousands of beaches, roads and shorelines, and created 800 state parks across America, including six in Virginia
